I am...

...an English art director and designer/maker with plenty of experience in both the artistic and commercial realms. Over the past eight years as a freelancer my work has included set building and construction, prop making, mold-making and casting, model-making, on set stand-by, and graphics. Until last year I was living and working in London, but am now establishing a new life and career in Norway. As you will see from my CV, I have a wide range of skills and work experience; I can be flexible in terms of the nature of work I undertake. My future aim is the establishment of my own business in Trondheim, offering design and construction services for creative and commercial applications.

Starting as an architectural draughtsman, followed by a number of years making and restoring musical instruments provided me with experience in working to a high degree of accuracy and quality. In 1998 I decided to return to education and took four years out to study fine art, graduating in 2002. Since that time I have been self-employed using my skills in a varied and often challenging range of projects.

Initially employed mainly by television companies and filmmakers, I later found a niche for myself providing art direction for photographers and advertising agencies as part of a working partnership with another London based designer. Covering a diverse range of magazine features, advertisements and events, the work called for a highly creative and practical approach. More recently I've been working closely with Punchdrunk, an award winning and innovative theatre company. As the Head of Scenic Construction on their production 'The Masque of the Red Death', I was responsible for the design and construction elements of over fifty different environments within one building, as part of an enormous 360-degree live theatre experience. With the assistance of a large group of student volunteers whom I co-ordinated, this was achieved over four months during the summer of 2007. The production gathered high critical praise and sold out six nights a week for almost seven months.

Since that time I have gone on to work with Punchdrunk on several projects. Under the Eiderdown, an education based theatre project involving the design and construction of a performance environment was successfully piloted in 6 London schools. Following an enthusiastic reception from pupils, parents and teachers, the program is now being expanded across many more London schools. I also worked with Punchdrunk, as well as The Old Vic and Kevin Spacey, on an interactive theatre experience/art exhibition in the empty arches under Waterloo station. Entitled Tunnel 228 the production included a vast 'Rube Goldberg' type machine that I built with Cambridge engineering graduate and artist Ben Tyers. The show opened to great anticipation and was hugely popular with both the press and public.

As well as these more creative projects, I have been involved in commercial work for numerous clients including Marks & Spencer's, the BBC and Vogue supplying sets, props, and graphics. This has included collaborations with respected photographers such as Rankin and Nick Knight, portraying prominent public figures, and promoting products such as Nike, Dell Computers and British Telecom. I also have experience of working with acrylics, and casting with polyester resins as part of a long freelance working association with Van Der Graaf, a specialist within the UK in unusual and unique plastics based commissions.

Since coming to Norway, I've continued to work closely with Oslo based fine artist Espen Dietrichson, producing a number of large sculptural works for schools and kindergartens - most recently at Kolsås in Trondheim. In addition I've forged connections within the Trondheim fine art scene, and was exhibition producer of the Meta.Morf art and technology biennial.

I hope my CV and this e-mail gives you an idea of my experience and abilities, and please do take a look at my website when you have time. Although I'm aware that many Norwegians speak excellent English, I took evening language classes before moving here, and hope this will help me become comfortable communicating in Norwegian as time goes on. Please feel free to contact me at any time in the future.

Vennlig hilsen,

The Masque of the Red Death

Punchdrunk's The Masque of the Red Death, realised with the cooperation of London's Battersea Arts Centre, completely transformed a very large Victorian former town hall into an immersive environment inspired by the stories of Edgar Allen Poe. Working alongside other designers and many student volunteers - offices, storerooms, corridors and auditoriums were rendered unrecognisable, as they became part of a supernatural gothic world. Spaces within the show included a vaudeville theatre, opium den, an apothecary's shop, and skull lined crypts. Because the audience were able to freely move around within the environment, great care was taken in every aspect of the design and construction process, to provide as convincing an experience as was possible.

'The show is certainly a triumph of set decoration and atmosphere. The "Masque" experience sprawls across several floors and many rooms and has been artfully designed to transport you to a vanished past'.

Under the Eiderdown - Schools Project

Inspired by the children's book Who Are You, Stripy Horse?, Punchdrunk's Under the Eiderdown project was created within 6 south London schools during the spring of 2009. Following a theatre workshop for the children led by a professional actor, a small design team would, over a weekend, secretly build a theatrical environment/installation within the school, based on the children's own ideas and reactions to the book and workshop. Then, during the following school week, small groups would be invited to enter the environment, where a resident storyteller (another actor) would tell them stories and encourage them to use their experience to create more tales of their own.

Tunnel 228

During May-June 2009, Punchdrunk were, at the invitation of Kevin Spacey in his role as creative director of The Old Vic Theatre, asked to create and curate an art exhibition/performance in a recently rediscovered network of tunnels underneath London's Waterloo train station. Asked to again take on the role of Head of Construction, I assisted engineer turned artist Ben Tyers in the design and construction of a huge 'Rube Goldberg' type kinetic installation.

Van Der Graaf Studio

While working as a freelancer with Van Der Graaf Design & Fabrication Studio I was the lead designer/maker on a large number of unique and challenging projects. As one of the UK's specialists in acrylics and polyester resin casting they have produced work for a huge variety of clients including Intel, Nike, Alexander McQueen and Kylie Minogue. A notable example is the clear acrylic stand for 'the frying pan' - the world's first electric guitar which I made for the Born To Rock: The Life and Times of the Electric Guitar exhibition.
